

Greetings,

As a concerned American who votes, I am troubled by the recent decision by the current FCC Directors to change the rules of media ownership. This change allows too many simple voice stations to be swallowed up by media giants.

One problem already made clear to me and many others is the ClearChannel fiasco on storm reporting. It is easy for this voter to realize that the FCC is not acting on the behalf of all America but on the behalf of those with millions.

What guarantees do we have that broadcasters like ClearChannel will step up to the plate by opening their reporting and being more responsive to local residents needs?

Thank you,
Terry Wellman
